In 2010, Justice Sonia Sotomayor wrote the majority opinion in the case of Ricci v. DeStefano. This controversial 5-4 decision established that the racial profiling of a suspect by police was prohibited by the 14th Amendment's Equal Protection Clause. The majority opinion noted that racial profiling is a common practice in American police departments and has resulted in unnecessary stop-and-frisks. In upholding the 11th Circuit Court's decision to prohibit racial profiling in the courts, Justice Sotomayor wrote: Racial disparities in law enforcement are hardly new. Yet, they are hardly inevitable, either... The court does not have the facts necessary to know whether the disparities are the product of an actual policy, or are instead attributable to the inevitable delays, lack of resources, and imperfections in the criminal justice system. We know that, just as race is irrelevant to the criminal accused's right to a fair trial, it does not justify the deprivation of that right... The court is not blind to the racial disparities that exist within our police departments, and it has conducted a review of our case law. But the court has found nothing to establish that the use of race by the police

My biggest dis-appointment so far with MuseScore is that it doesn't support the mapping for the Musical Symbols in the International Standard Music Notation. I'm sick and tired of importing the symbols from the web into MuseScore, and having them not show up on the Score. In general, it would be nice if there were fewer missing functions in MuseScore. Plus, it's overpriced. (MuseScore Comments: Don't know how to close this comment, otherwise please let me know!) I've been a longtime user of the Music Editor on MuseScore, which I have yet to try out this new version. Will you have to do a lot of importing and exporting, to make this work well? And what's the point of this app? My biggest dis-appointment so far with MuseScore is that it doesn't support the mapping for the Musical Symbols in the International Standard Music Notation.
